Kuju Entertainment opens its first non-UK studio in San Francisco

Eindhoven, January 30, 2008 – Catalis N.V., a worldwide leading outsourcing services provider focusing on high-end technical services relating to the creation of digital content for the film, video games and telecom industry, is pleased to announce that its subsidiary Kuju Entertainment is entering the US market with a new studio opening in San Francisco.

Kuju America is the newest addition to Kuju's existing 5 game development studios and the first to be located outside of the UK. San Francisco has been chosen as the location because of the thriving video games industry and huge pool of development talent in the area. Led by industry veteran John Kavanagh, the studio will initially focus on the rapidly growing casual games sector.

Jonathan Newth, Corporate Development Officer of Kuju Entertainment, commented "This is an exciting and significant step for the Kuju group of studios. The US, and San Francisco in particular, is a natural choice for our first non-UK studio. It's a hotbed of development talent, home to many leading publishers and some of the leading US games press. We're delighted to have John on board, with his wealth of experience and contacts, to maximize the potential of the business in the area."

Kuju America has already begun work on its first title. For further information please refer to the website www.kujuamerica.com.

John Kavanagh, Studio Head for Kuju America, added "It's great to be working with Kuju to start this new enterprise. I've known Kuju and the management team for many years and I really approve of their model of multiple autonomous studios. I'm looking forward to making Kuju America the next successful Kuju studio."

Kuju America will also be attending the forthcoming Game Developers Conference in San Francisco from 18th-22nd February.
